IMPERATIVE THAT EXPERIENCED MEN BE SELECTED OFFICIALS

Wm. A. Schnader, Republican Nominee for Gov., Discusses Governmental Features

MUST HAVE ABILITY Local and State Government Is Very Important Business

STROUDSBURG, June 20.—The importance of selecting experienced and capable officials for the administration of both local and State government was emphasized by Attorney General William A. Schnader, Republican nominee for Governor, in an address yesterday before the State Association of Boroughs in convention here.

"In both State and local government," he said, "it is imperative that we have at the helm officials who through experience and proved capacity have demonstrated their ability to direct affairs efficiently, economically and to the full advantage of the taxpayer."

Mr. Schnader discussed many features of borough government, including the necessity for adjustment of the tax burden on real estate, co-ordination of police activities, unemployment relief, and home rule. He said in part:

"I am happy to be the guest of an organization devoted to a practical ideal of public service—an organization which represents the largest body of elected community officials in the United States."

"In meeting your members I feel that I am not only among friends but among co-workers. For each of us, whether he serves the Borough or the State, is concerned with the same thing—economical and efficient government."

"At this time of stress, our goal is both difficult and worthy of our greatest effort. Specifically, it is to achieve for the State, its subdivisions and its people that condition of prosperity and happiness which, to a large degree, existed before the depression and whose attainment represents the highest aim of government."

"It is not my purpose today to proffer a great deal of advice on the local administration of your own local communities. I say this, first, because I realize you do not need it; and, second, because I believe that neither government nor gratuitous advice should be centralized in, nor emanate exclusively from, Harrisburg."

"My eleven years' experience in the Attorney General's Department has taught me that the secret of a successful State government is not to be found under the dome of a Capitol. It is to be found at home. Our country has sound and successful local governments, happy and prosperous communities, long before it had centralized government; and while for many years the trend has been away from home government and toward central authority, that does not prove that the trend has been for the best."

"The smaller communities are the important units of government. They are the counterbalancing influences to inevitable ills of large centers of population. In the more than 900 boroughs within our Commonwealth dwells a population of almost three million—all of whom have been benefited by legislation written and sponsored by your Association."

"When I say that our goals are similar, I can name many aims which represent the things we are working for. I can list many beliefs we hold in common."

"We all believe, for example, in reduction of the real-estate taxpayer's burden and home rule for local government."

"We all believe in the development of a plan for getting regular jobs for the unemployed. We believe in adequate relief for the destitute."

"We believe in a square deal for labor; in driving sweatshops out of Pennsylvania; in equal educational opportunities for all children; in opportunities for a freer, fuller life for all citizens."

"We believe in co-operation with the Federal Government in practical economic recovery projects."

"We believe in encouraging a better understanding between town and country."

"We believe in improved methods of combating crime."

"We believe in clean elections."

"We believe in encouraging a greater interest and voice in governmental affairs on the part of the young men and women of the State."

"And, finally, we believe in economical, honest and efficient administration of the government of both the State and its subdivisions."

"In the attainment of these goals, the borough government plays an important part. The quality of its administration affects the health, the prosperity and the happiness of millions. In these conventions the delegates decide on important common problems of community life and advocate the repeal or the enactment of that legislation necessary to create

TAX SITUATION IS DISCUSSED BY METZGER

Fed'l Government's Invasion of State's Tax Fields Is Becoming Serious

ONE OF GREAT CONCERN

Notes:—This is the first of two articles presenting a discussion of the Pennsylvania tax situation by Leon D. Metzger, state secretary of revenue. The first article outlines the present situation and the second discusses remedial measures.

HARRISBURG, June 20.—(INS)—The Federal Government's invasion of tax fields which historically have been left to the states and their political subdivisions is one of the dilemmas facing taxpayers today, is the belief of Leon D. Metzger, state secretary of revenue.

The result, he said, was a tendency to "dry up" to a considerable degree the sources of revenue available to states.

Metzger said a typical situation exists in the matter of personal income taxes. He said 26 states have such levies while the federal government also levies an income tax. After the war, he pointed out, the federal government also invaded the inheritance tax field which, he declared, belongs logically to the states.

"Probably the most unfortunate of all branches of government are the political subdivisions because the federal government and the states have left to them as a taxing field practically nothing of substance except real estate," he said. "In Pennsylvania, we at least reserve real estate exclusively for them. In addition, the counties have the so-called personal property tax."

Metzger said the personal property tax produced about $13,000,000 in 1929 and probably will not produce much over $10,000,000 in 1934.

The estimated total cost of government in the United States for this year is, roughly, $17,000,000,000, Metzger said. Of this aggregate, he said the federal government will cost about $7,000,000,000; state governments about $2,000,000,000 and local governments about $8,000,000,000.

At the same time, he pointed out, the total income of the nation has dropped from $82,000,000,000 in 1929 to $40,000,000,000 in 1933.

Unemployment relief, he said, became too great a problem for local governments to handle in the past few years. The states were forced to assist the local governments and subsequently the federal government was forced to come to the aid of the states.

In Pennsylvania alone, Metzger said, a total of $147,728,455 has been spent for unemployment relief up to June 1. The Commonwealth furnished $63,467,763 and the federal government $85,260,692.

Metzger said that except for a six-months sales tax and levies on beer and liquor, together with anticipated profits from the state liquor stores, Pennsylvania had added no new tax burdens.

In a nutshell, the situation, according to Metzger, is:

"The tax bill goes up while the taxpayer's income has gone down."

GREAT BRITAIN HAS LEARNED MASS PRODUCTION AND IS OUTDOING GERMANY IN THAT REGARD, FINDS H. R. KNICKERBOCKER IN HIS SURVEY

Twenty-Five Million Articles Are Being Turned Out Annually

VISIT SHEFFIELD PLANT

One Man Is Still Working At the Age of 83

(Note: Great Britain has learned mass production and is outdoing the Germans in that regard, H. R. Knickerbocker, foreign correspondent of International News Service, writes in the seventh article of his series on British recovery.)

SHEFFIELD, June 20.—(INS)—Britain can not recover because British costs are too high. Thus ran the forecast of Britain's future.

But is Britain recovering? Regard Sheffield.

Twenty-five million articles a year are today being turned out by the machines of "Quantity Ltd." In this city the sum of a year's sales is around $2,500,000. Average cost per article is therefore ten cents.

This is the new Sheffield, New Sheffield has learned mass production. "Quantity Ltd." makes 1,200 gross, $885,500 spoons and forks a week. But they make only two patterns.

New Sheffield has beaten the Germans. "Quantity Ltd." exports to Germany, Fatherland of cheap production.

Old Sheffield is just around the corner. Four objects tell its story. One of them is a steam engine that has been pumping water for over 100 years and is still pumping water. It is in the Elsecar Colliery not far from here. A man named Thomas Newcomen invented it. That was some time ago.

It was so long ago that James Watt had time to study Newcomen's engine and to improve upon it, and thereby win the title of inventor of the steam engine in 1769. His improvement helped bring several hundred million people into the world during the course of the next five generations. Probably only a fraction of us now living would be here had it not been for the industrial revolution.

That was important enough to obscure the fame of Mr. Newcomen. But consider the quality of an engine that is still doing useful work after 100 years.

Old Sheffield built for quality. Number Two exhibit is the engine that still supplies all the power in the firm of "John Quality and Sons." Men who were boys in America twenty years ago would remember "John Quality's" trademark on their pocket.

THE HARD-SHELL HABIT

"Too frequently," said the president of a large industrial establishment in a recent interview, "I have witnessed business men making wrong decisions that are based on antiquated facts." He followed up his statement by asserting that the increase in sales made by any business corporation was usually due to some deviation from normal custom, or to some departure from habit based on facts accepted, in all probability, so long ago that they had become out-of-date.

The habit does not confine itself to business firms. Too many people base their decisions on opinions formed and held long after the basis for their existence has become obsolete. These hard-shelled conservatism would why success always passes them by, when those whom they consider rash and even balanced grow increasingly prosperous.

The company president's remedy for this weakness is simple. It consists merely in getting into touch with people. Once a month it is his custom to set out in his roadster for some nearby destination, with the ostensible purpose of getting into conversation with chance people along the way. He finds out what a hotel owner, who also carries the agency for Fords, thinks about the surrounding market for farm equipment. He falls into converse with two druggists who can tell him of demand in retail materials. Even the man at the gas station can tell him much of the automobile situation in his country.

The way to keep out of the rut is to keep in touch with live men and women, to get their point of view, and to keep green the growing point of opinion.

THE DIRIGIBLE'S VALUE

The navy department will undertake to answer the question concerning the value of the dirigible as a weapon of war.

An intensive study of the matter will be made this summer by a special committee appointed by the department. Much of the study will be based upon the performance of the Macon in the recent Caribbean fleet maneuvers. Its findings and recommendations will be reported to the secretary of the navy and to the President.

Experts are divided in their views on the question. One group holds that the dirigible is too large to be of practical value in war. Its size makes it a good target for enemy guns. Others believe that despite the handicap of size, it can be put to important use for observation and other purposes.

The question obviously is one for experts to answer.

Even a layman, though, can see the need of a final decision being reached. Dirigibles are costly. The navy now has no definite airship policy. It has been and still is experimenting with dirigibles. It is time for the value of such craft to be determined. They should be made a fixed part of the fleet or abandoned.

It seems probable that sufficient data is available on which to base a wise decision. It will be the duty of the special committee to decide the issue.

Improvement bonds are retired by a sinking fund, but it isn't really the fund that is sunk.

Of the woman was brought to the station June 6th. The theory that the two murders might have been the work of the same slayer nevertheless was not immediately discarded and police continued to investigate all possible angles of the two puzzling cases.

A post mortem examination on the torso of the woman which was found in Brighton station Monday, revealed a possible motive for her slaying, Sir Bernard Spilsbury, Scotland Yard pathologist, who has come to be regarded in Great Britain as a modern Sherlock Holmes, said that the woman was an expectant mother. A child would have been born to her, it was reported in about four months.

Great Britain Has Learned Mass Production

knives. Their grandfathers would remember it still better, for "Quality" found 119 years ago, began selling knives in America in 1839.

It was an old trademark in America when the Civil War broke out. It survived every vicissitude of trade tariff. "John Quality" closed their New York office last year.

They have not closed shop at home. The old plant is still going, and it is going on power generated by a Corliss valve steam engine built in 1882 and clattering away exactly as it did fifty-two years ago.

Exhibits three and four of old Sheffield are named respectively Wilfred Cooper and Fred Smith. Wilfred works for "John Quality and Sons." He has been working there for 71 years. Wilfred is eighty-three. He went to work when he was twelve.

"And it ain't because I'm a teetotaler either," chuckled Wilfred as he thrust a knife blade in the tempering furnace. "Only I asked for a glass and not for a pint. One glass is enough for me."

"Your father worked here too, didn't he?" remarked the director.

"Yes, yes, but he drank."

"A bit," suggested the director.

"No, not a bit, he drank . . ." And the old man put his hands to his waist as though to hold in his merriment, then explained: "A lot." We left him still laughing as he pumped the bellows of his furnace.

Winding, dark and century-old passages led us to Fred Smith. But Fred, polishing blades, is just a youngster. He is only 79. He has been working for "Quality" for 65 years.

"They forged a blade for me. A boy of fifty-odd did it with a hammer. Incredible the skill with which he fashioned the blade. Precisely as they did it 100 years ago. Finished, hard ground, hand polished, it would have no superior in quality in the world. That is old Sheffield."

But it takes old Sheffield thirty minutes to forge a carving knife, by hand. It takes new Sheffield less than a minute by machine.

Old Sheffield paid a ten per cent dividend from 1876 to 1922. Their next profit was in 1929. Then none at all until 1932. Capacity for their plants would be 1,900 workmen. The last time they worked at capacity was in 1894. Today they employ 300 workmen.

Wages of their master cutlers are a minimum of twenty-five dollars a week.

New Sheffield hires girls. Fifteen hundred work people populate the plant of "Quality Ltd." Seventy-five per cent of them are women and girls. They go to work at 14.

In a line of them standing over buffing machines one small figure seemed improbably young. But she was 14, legal age. Her wage was $2 a week.

"What is the real difference," I asked the director of "John Quality and Sons," between grinding a blade by hand and grinding it by machine? Is it really worth the price?

"A machine," responded the director modestly, expects every blade to be exactly alike. A man knows that no two blades are ever exactly alike."

"Quantity Ltd." is working six hours a week overtime and it is constantly behind on orders. It sells at home and abroad. So cheap are its prices that tariffs constitute little hindrance. To France, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, to South Africa, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, go its products, packed by the gross, produced in mass and sold in mass.

They are not the most popular firm in Sheffield. They were only found thirty-three years ago but already they produce more table cutlery than the next six firms in Sheffield put together.

Since 1929 they have increased one third in size. They turn out trainloads of silverware. They carry a stock of 500,000 ounces silver. All of their employees have to hump to keep up with the machines. Not all of them seem to like it. Only the girls in the silver-ware department sing a jazz tune as they hammered silvered teapots.

"Quantity Ltd." is opening a new scissors factory. The Germans used to have a monopoly on the market for cheap scissors. "Quantity" will stamp out a dozen scissors in the time it would take old Sheffield to forge one pair by hand.

The profits of "Quantity Ltd." have increased every year. Recovery year is just another better year for "Quantity Ltd."

For "John Quality and Sons" 1933 meant the first profit in five years. This year will mean a few more gross of orders. For "Quantity Ltd." it will mean another shipload.

Old Sheffield and new are proof of Britain's come-back. New Sheffield has demonstrated that the oldest British industry learn the latest lessons. Despite the prophets, some British industries have cut their costs, the Ashington Coal Mines, the United Steel Companies plant, the cheap mass production of "Quality Ltd." may still be exceptions, but they show the way. To this increase of technical efficiency no small part of Britain recovery is due.

Not all of British industry has gone this party. What of textiles, the cotton trade, next to coal the largest employer of labor in Britain? Can Lancashire come back?

attendance records of the members and spoke of the musical accomplishments of the class as a whole. "Albert Goldman," he said, "is the sixth boy to win the Grundy medal since 1906 when it was first awarded. Twenty-eight girls have captured the coveted trophy."

As a gift from the class the school board will purchase for the school library 83 books which it has been customary for the board to present at the time of graduation, giving one book to each graduate.

Imperative That Experienced Men Be Selected Officials

municipal power to carry on local governments and to meet those perpetually changing conditions brought about by experience, scientific advancement and education.

"The present hour is demanding improved machinery for all the affairs of Government, no matter how large or how small the political subdivision.

"No persons should be more interested in problems of local government than the delegates to the annual conventions of the Borough Association. This body of Government officials has been successful in clarifying and codifying the statutes of Pennsylvania which authorize the creation of municipalities and the choosing of the necessary officials to govern them. It must continue its splendid work. It must work towards the reduction of our mounting layers of taxes, towards the elimination of heavy financial burdens and municipal bankruptcies.

"The Association can do much in harmonizing hours of employment wages and working conditions, so that man will utilize the product of the tremendous strides being made in industrial development and science.

"It can give valuable assistance in making criminal law more effective in the war against crime. Important changes are needed in policing the thousands of municipal units of this state.

"Crime knows no boundaries. Borough police are handicapped because criminals thrive on the lack of coordination of the police of neighboring cities and towns. If the criminal goes from one jurisdiction to another, an independent organization must be set in motion to apprehend him.

"This condition offers a challenge to the best thought of the nation to produce regulations which will cope with the situation.

"These are serious problems. But they are only a few of the many serious problems which will confront public servants during the hard pull out of the depression.

"Their solution demands not only devoted labor, but labor backed by practical experience.

Little Giant of the Links

By BURNLEY

GENE SARAZEN, swarthy and sawed-off linksman, who for the past few years has been acknowledged the world's best golfer, is now in England practicing for the coming British Open championship.

The husky, little Italian is especially desirous of winning the British diadem this time. Last year at St. Andrews he apparently had the title in his pocket when a heart-breaking eight on the famous "hell bunker" par five hole sunk him during his final round, enabling Denny Shute and Craig Wood to squeeze in ahead of him in a first place tie.

The memory of this cruel twist of golfing fate still rankles in Sarazen's breast, and he will tee off at Sandwich next week with blood in his eye. Gene is a tough man to beat, especially when his fighting spirit is aroused, so it behooves the other pros to watch out for this mighty little gamester when the battle royal at Royal St. George's gets under way.

Win or lose, Sarazen will not remain idle after the British classic is finished. Gene already has an extensive exhibition tour mapped out for himself. Paired with Joe Kirkwood, famous trick shot artist, Sarazen will tour through England, Scotland, Belgium, Holland, France and Germany; and after completing this European jaunt, they will invade the Far East for more exhibitions.

Kirkwood and Sarazen make a corking team for exhibition play. Joe's trick shots amaze the foreigners, though they are now an old story to Americans. As the golf bugs of foreign climes are very anxious to see American top-flighters in action, Gene and Joe are assured of making plenty of shekels on their tour.

MAXIE'S CAREER IN PICTURES... No. 1 .. As He Began Climb to Title

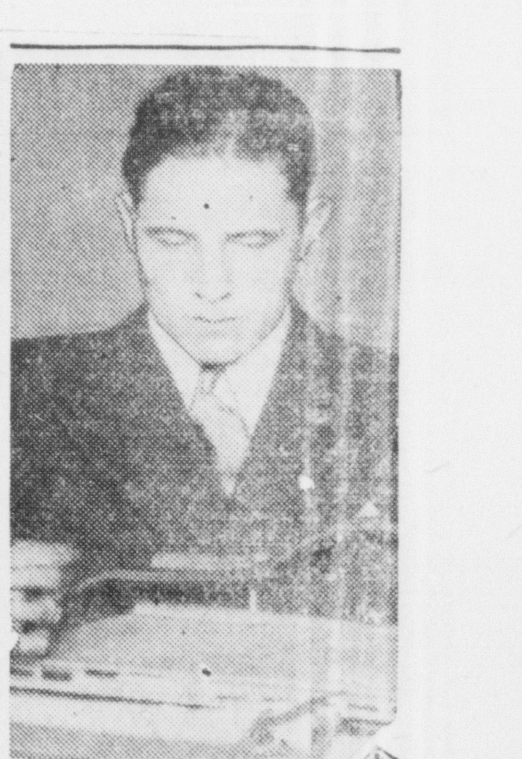

Born in Omaha, Neb., on Feb. 11, 1909, Max Baer was reared on the sunny slopes of the Pacific, giving California the right to claim him as her own son. Of Jewish-American stock, Max comes from an enthusiastic boxing family. He is shown, left, giving "Pop" Baer a dutiful embrace, while his brother, Buddy, also a boxer, follows suit.

In 1929, Max made his debut in California slugging circles, becoming known as a big, fast, game fellow with a deadening wallop, and a specialty of knockouts, administered in a brief, lightning manner.

Setting a merry pace in his ring encounters, Max broke into national prominence in August, 1930, when he knocked out Meyer "K. O." Christner in the second round of their bout at Oakland. Baer, pictured after winning the battle, was regarded then as one of the most promising of young heavyweights, sports writers hailing him as the next champion.

Tragedy entered his career just two weeks after his encounter with Stribling when Frankie Canabell collapsed in the fifth round of his fight with Max, and subsequently died. Max was freed of manslaughter charges.
